PRESCRIPTIONS A SPECIALTY

SENATOR VEST,

OF MISSOURI, INTERVIEWED ON THE POLITICAL QUESTION.

He Gives Out a Strong Argument in Favor of Silver.

Attributes the Hard Times and Scarcity of Money to the Single Gold Standard.

Washington, Nov. 18.—Senator West, of Missouri, is now in Washington, was interviewed on the political situation and he gave out the following for publication:

"First—Continued hard times, caused by scarcity on money. The gold men claim that money is abundant, and quote from the treasury reports to prove it. They say, there is a per capita circulation of $25.07, while, in fact, there is not half that sum. They count the reserves in the national and State banks, together with the bullion and gold in the treasury, and the $600,000,000 of gold coin which they estimate to be in circulation. When confronted with the fact that there is no gold in circulation they reply that this is true, but that it answers all the purposes of currency in the way of reserves and exchange. This is not a satisfactory answer, for every intelligent man knows that the gold of the country, no matter whse the amount, is hoarded, by reason of the fact that under existing laws its purchasing power is constantly increasing.

"We will never have prosperity until there is free coinage of silver, and our volume of money is increased. No country can be prosperous with an increasing population and decreasing circulation.

"The United States is now suffering from financial congestion. What money we have is in the great banks and money centres, and it will stay there as long as we have the single gold standard. Business, except in a few industries, is stagnant. Everybody is afraid to go into new enterprises, because prices are falling. The gold men seem unable to understand the difference in the effect upon a country of low prices and falling prices. Low prices, when taxed, may be a blessing to the masses, but falling prices paralyze business and ruin all classes except the money lenders.

"Second—We received from Harrison's administration a practically bankrupt treasury, with continuing appropriations from the Reed Congress of $120,000,000, and Cleveland entered upon his second term handicapped by these conditions and the beginning of a great panic.

"Even then we might have weathered the storm, but for unfortunate and irradicable differences in our party upon the financial question and the tariff. I do not care to discuss these differences in detail.

"The President unfortunately rejected all offers of compromise from those of us who differed with him on silver, and refused positively to use the power given him by law to rebuke the gold speculators and protect the gold reserve by tendering silver even as part payment, when greenbacks and Sherman notes were presented at the treasury for redemption. I believe that Carlisle at one time contemplated such action, but the President, who, just before his inauguration, talked reasonably and conservatively, suddenly became obdurate, and ordered the payment of gold exclusively. This, of course, placed the treasury at the mercy of the speculators, and the logical result was the veto of the seigniorage bill, the issue of gold bonds and the paying tribute to a foreign syndicate.

"The President, surrounded by a lot of income burners, who told him he could do no wrong, demanded an unconditional surrender by the silver men in Congress, and that the volume of money should be reduced $40,000,000 annually by repealing the purchase clause of the Sherman act, without putting anything in the vacuum so created.

"In other words, he demanded that we should indorse the single gold standard.

"The same income burners are now telling the President that the recent elections demonstrate his foresight, and one of his Cabinet has come out in an interview gloating over the result. No one differed more than myself with Brice and Gorman on the present tariff, and I supported the measure as it passed only because it was better than the McKinley act. It is only just to say, however, that but for the assurance of the President and Mr. Carlisle to Senators Harris and Jones that some bill must be passed, Mr. Cleveland never would have had the opportunity of branding the act as treasury to the party.

"Whatever else may happen, the time will never come when I can rejoice in seeing the Democratic flag trampled under foot, no matter by whom it is borne. I am not that kind of a Democrat."

A BIG STRIKE

In Which 10,000 Men May be Involved

Is Threatened among the Workmen in New York.

NEW YORK, November 18.—Eight hundred members of the Housesmith and Bridgemen's Union were called out on a strike today on buildings where the work is being done by J. B. & J. M Cornell and Milliken Bros., two of the most prominent members of the Iron League. Four hundred of the men have been employed by the Cornells on twelve buildings and about the same number were on eight buildings where the iron work is being done by Milliken Bros. The demands of the strikers include a wage scale running from $3.50 a day for bowman finishers, to $2.50 a day for blacksmith finishers. The strikers also want a recognition of their union, the employment of only union men and a new regulations about Sunday work and overtime.

Should non-union men be substituted for the strikers then a sympathetic strike will be ordered, and from 5,000 to 10,000 men are likely to be called out. The sympathetic strike will effect the plumbers and gasfitters, plasterers, carpenters, hoisting engineers, steamfitters, derrickmen, laborers, cement workers, stair builders, elevator constructors, painters, varnishers, framers, mosaic workers, tin and sheet iron workers and granite cutters. The bricklayers who do not take part in sympathetic strikes, will be forced out in many buildings the strike of the other trades.

The State Board of Mediation and Arbitration met today to consider the strike. Frank Larry represented the strikers.

THE NEW WOMAN.

The word "new" is singularly applied now-a-days. It generally referred to immaterial things in olden times. There has been a considerable advance, it seems, as it is no longer a new spinning wheel for the house, though sometimes a new piano, and while it may occasionly be a new bonnet, it is generally a new hat, or boots and such like. Without being aware of it, the woman of the last half century have been tending towards masculinity. And hence, as some have gone beyond what many think their legitimate sphere, they are recognized as a class designated as "The New Woman." Happily our Southland, so far, is not a favorable field for exploits.

In no part of the world is the true woman more highly exalted and honored than in the South. She need be the slave of no one; the law holds her as equal to man in all legal and moral rights. There is no difference in the provisions for education. Institutions of learning are abundant for all classes and schools for physical as well as mental training. Of late years many branches of business have been thorwn open to girls, so that a support is not confined to the needle, going out to service, or a hasty marriage. But a few will aspire to manish employments and manish sports not fitted to their physical condition—of course there will be exceptions in this lattitude.

Some how or other there is a sacredness about the terms mother, wife and sister that old soldiers and mature men cannot cast down. They fail to see in "The New Woman," so-called, the presiding genius of the quiet, happy home and the gentle influences of other days. Woman's dependence is her great protection; for man will risk his life for those he loves and are under his care. Possibly the wave may sweep over this sunny land and bring its unsexed women and regulation bloomers, but it is hoped that they will be few and far between. OBSERVER.

The Commercial Appeal which in all respects is one of the very best newspapers in the South, every department of which is edited with marked ability, has established a bureau at Washington City with Mr. C. JOHN R. LYNCH

Addressed a Large Audience of Colored People Last Night at the City Hall.

John R. Lynch, the colored ex-Congressman, who came to Meridian yesterday, apparently unheralded, was greeted last night by an audience of colored people, with a small spinkle of white Republicans, that filled to overflowing the large City Hall. Lynch is recognized as the ablest representative of his race in Mississippi and is really the leader of the old Republicans in this State, always taking the initiative in every political movement made. His speech last night met with liberal applause from his colored auditors, especially that portion of it where he discussed the franchise clause of the State constitution. It is upon this question that Lynch proposes to make a canvass of the State, with the view of arousing the Republicans to the point of making a contest in the several Congressional elections and of finally carrying it before the Congress of the United States.

Lynch went from here to Macon, where he will address his people tonight.

THIRTEEN LIVES LOST.

A Trolley Car Plunges 120 feet Through a Draw Bridge.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, November 18.—A heavy electric motor car carrying twenty or thirty passengers went through the Central viaduct on Saturday evening at 7:45. Thirteen persons lost their lives by the accident.

The list of dead and missing is as follows:

James McLaughlin, base ball player; Henry W. Mecklenburg, tailor; Edward Hoffman, conductor on ill-fated car; Mrs. John A. Sauerheimer; Miss Bessie Davis, school teacher; Harry W. Foster, clerk; Mrs. Minnie C. Brown; Curt Lephene (or Clemens), pianist; Mrs. A. A. Hoffman; Gertie, three years old; Harvey Hoffman, seven years old; Mrs. Martha Palmer; Marie Mettgen, domestic; Augusta Sarinski; Louis F. Huletz, mail carrier.

The missing are Lottie Voth; Miss Martha Sauerheimer; B. C. Page, residence unknown; Matthew Gallagher.

The draw was open for a tug drawing a schooner, which was about to pass beneath the bridge. As usual the gates were closed on both sides of the draw, and danger lights of red were displayed to guard against just such accidents as occured tonight. An electric car was seen coming along from the east towards the south. Captain Charles Brennan, who had charge of the bridge, had no thought of danger.

The car came to a standstill two hundred feet from the draw, and the conductors alighted but appears not to have seen the danger lights or the closed gates, and signalled the motorman to go ahead. The motoman turned on the current and the car moved swiftly on the down grade towards the draw. Only a few feet from the draw the motorman realized that it was open and shutting off the current, jumped to the bridge and ran away. The momentum of the car was too great for it to be stopped. The car crashed through the great iron gates, reeled for a moment on the brink of the abyss 120 feet deep, hung for a moment and went crashing downward.

Two male passengers jumped from the rear platform of the car just before it took its awful plunge. The conductor tried to escape but found it impossible.

AT THE GRAND.

The Baldwin Melville Company in "The Devil's Web" Last Night.

Another large audience overflowed the Grand Opera house last night to witness the production of "The Devil's Web," as presented by the Baldwin Melville Company. The play was, taken as a whole, good, though there was very little to the plot. Wilson Day, as leading man, proved a decided success, and won great favor from the audience. Little Ruth was the favorite as Little Marie, and Louise Hamilton, who took with the audience at Monday night's performance, was noticeable for her absence after the second act, much to the regret of those present, as she was the main drawing card of the play. The remainder of the cast were about the same as in the first performance. For a matinee to-day will be presented the American play, "Davy Crockett," and to-night an entirely new play, "Louisiana."

Bishop Heslin was there to administer the sacrament of confirmation upon a class of 30 or 40 persons, both white men and Indians at the church in Tucker last Sunday afternoon. The largest assembly of its kind was that which was held in the church at the time mentioned. The meeting was a grand success in every particular and the Catholic people have a right to congratulate themselves in having such a worthy man in their church as Bishop Heslin.

At a joint meeting of the City Boards, held in the office of the City Clerk last night, matters pertaining to the sewerage of the public buildings and looking towards enhancing the efficiency of the fire department were discussed. The Board at this meeting decided to award contracts for the sewerage of the City Hall and central school building and to place ... for 1,000 feet of hose.

A ... committee from the two boards were empowered to inquire into the bids offered and to award contracts upon the bids that they deemed best for the city. The committee met this morning and awarded to James Kearney contract for constructing sewers to City Hall; Meridian Plumbing and Supply Company, contract for constructing sewers to Central school building; Gutta Percha Rubber company of New York, contract for 1,000 feet of hose.

HER THOUGHTS.

What a "Graded Teacher" Thought of the Show.

[Written For The Meridian Daily Herald.]

She had been "down town" nearly all the morning, for it was a day when "business" calls were urgent. At the first note of music, announcing the "parade," she, with her friend, another "graded teacher," made a rush for a good vantage ground, where all might be seen.

Never did dauntless soldiers upon the field of battle press forward with more determination to reach the front. Undaunted by obstacles; fearing no collisions, caring not for the pouring rain, her motto was "onward," and she never paused until thro' the seething mass of "park" colored humanity, she had pushed her way and among the "foremost ranks" she stood with parted lips and eager eyes. "How grand is'nt it superb! Just look at those Japs!" were the exclamations that ever and anon evidenced her enjoyment of the ever changing scene. But soon, all too soon the elephants, the riders, the national flags and last "golden chariots" were slowly disappearing in the distance. Then what did this persevering teacher do? Lament, that she could see no more? Not for a moment! Tho' the rain was descending in torrents, and in spite of the entreaties of her companions, she pushed forward and quickly at the packed side-walks ... by quickly "elbowing" her way to the next corner, she again had the delight of seeing part of the parade.

Among the spectators, were some that had come many leagues, some who were willing to fast, that they might feast upon the "many wonders," boys whose hearts almost stood still at a realization of their "wildest dreams," African descendants, whose eyes' round with wonder, seem to exclaim: "Golly, did you eber see de like afore?" Yet, there were none, no not one whose enjoyment could equal, much less surpass, the wild delight that "Barnum and Bailey's Street Parade" awakened in the heart of one of Meridian's gifted teachers.

NATIONAL HUMILIATION.

That Is What We Get Out of the Deal With the Gold Syndicate.

Strenuous efforts are being made in certain quarters to make the public feel under great obligations to both the syndicate and the administration for the financial miracle that is being worked in the United States treasury. We are assured that it is accomplished only by performing the marvelous task of practically suspending the operation of the laws of trade.

No transaction in salvage can be necessary unless a wreck has occurred. It is always impossible to justify the delivery of a ship into the custody of salvors and the payment of a heavy salvage, and at the same time deny that there has been any wreck and allege that the steering and pilotage which preceded the payment of salvage deserve the highest praise. The importance of the salvors is proportionate to the helplessness of the wrecked crew. Praise for the syndicate is blame for the administration.

For an independent government to surrender its treasury powers to a syndicate to be "financed" is a transaction such as may have occurred in the history of the weaker powers, like Egypt, Mexico or the Argentine Republic, but is without precedent in the case of the United States or any other first class power. The attitude in which it places us is that of saying to all the world: "The United States is bankrupt, and there ought, so far as the confidence of the public is concerned, to be a run on its treasury at this moment for gold, but two London firms, in whom the brokers generally have confidence, have kindly taken charge of the case, and we hope none of you have the audacity to attempt a run for gold on banking firms which represent $600,000,000 of capital."

It is from optimists and eulogists of the existing condition of things that these exposures of its weakness came. These destructive descriptions of the actual state of affairs are expected to inspire the public mind with confidence, forgetting that such bulletins of hourly change signed by the responsible physicians are never published except on behalf of a very sick patient.

The artists who paint pictures of the syndicate's power do not seem to perceive that they imply that its power to "hold up" the government is as great as its power to "hold up" the brokers, and that the contract bears upon its face the evidence of being the result of the exercise of such a power unflinchingly and unsparingly. If the syndicate can now compel the brokers not to ship gold when its shipment is profitable, they could last February, with equal potency, induce the withdrawal of gold from the treasury in any required quantity necessary to compel the government to resort to the services of the syndicate, as it has done.

The syndicate can create another run upon the treasury at will, and another crisis, rendering its own services as salvors of the treasury as indispensable as they were in February. After Oct. [illegible] right to its good offices will [illegible] pend, and the question whether the syndicate will make another borrowing of 3,500,000 ounces of gold by the treasury necessary or not does not seem to depend upon any other exigency than the cold question whether the syndicate would prefer to make $13,500,000 more out of the treasury or to let the time go idly by without profit.

The exasperating dependence of the United States subtreasury on extemporized aid from foreign bankers, which is brought home to the senses of every American by the syndicate transaction, is a condition of things which calls the blush of shame to the cheek of every patriot sufficiently intelligent to comprehend the transaction. It is no less than national humiliation. —George Gunton in New York Press.

What Is Wanting.

What, then, is wanting is the men with the old spirit of American independence of 1776, with the courage to declare that justice is the true standard of honor, and that sound money is the gold and silver coin that is named in the constitution as legal tender money and is expressly stated in all our national obligations, except gold and silver certificates, to be the sort of money in which they are payable?

The spirit of loyalty to America and of faithful regard for our constitution inspired all our laws of coinage, legal tender and finance from the foundation of our government until 1873. Then it failed for two reasons. One reason was the grasping greed of Great Britain and her allied stock and bond holders in our midst. The other reason was that our people had sunk their spirit of national independence.—Senator Morgan.

Money Question First.

Keep the money question to the front. It is the only living issue before the people.

I believe in every principle advocated by the Omaha declaration, and I would add 20 more if I were building a platform for myself, but we must have some regard for the 5,000,000 votes we need. Why should we force something on them which is of no consequence until the money question is settled? By taking that question first, which is affecting the greatest number of people, and upon which they are educated and have formed convictions, we will win a victory, give relief and clear the way for the next one which effects the greatest number of people, and so on, until all our demands are enacted into law.—H. E. Taubeneck.

Here's Your Slogan.

Corn has dropped off 11 points and wheat 16 within a short time. This points directly to the lowest price for these products in years. This spurt in prices over which so much fuss has been made by the subsidized press was only speculative after the crops had left the farmer. More money and higher prices should be the slogan of all who mean better times for the people.—National Watchman.

MONEY AND PRICES.

Secretary Carlisle Driven Into a Corner by "Silver Dollar" Bland.

Mr. Carlisle in his speeches has laid down the broad proposition that the free coinage of silver would give us a dollar worth only 50 cents, and in the very same breath insists that the restoration of silver would cause a contraction of currency and fall in prices. If there should be a fall in prices below what they now are, it would mean that the dollar would buy more than the dollar now buys. If he would explain how a 50 cent dollar can buy more than a 100 cent dollar, he would make himself better understood.

The idea of cheap money and falling prices are antagonistic. The two cannot coexist, and no man understands this better than Mr. Carlisle himself. A cheap dollar means that it will buy less of property. He argues that the effect of free coinage would cause the export of our gold to foreign countries. Taking this argument as true, it would not happen until there had been a sufficient supply of other money to take the place of the gold so exported, for the simple reason that gold would be worth more here than abroad until we had supplied its place with other money to keep up the prices here as compared to prices abroad.

But what would be the effect of sending our gold abroad? It would go into the gold standard countries—England, Germany and France. It would swell the volume of money in those countries to the amount of gold exported, and if that amount was 600,000,000 it would add 600,000,000 to the volume of money of these countries where we sell our surplus products. The wheat growers, the cotton growers, the producers of food and textiles export their surplus to these countries, and if 600,000,000 of gold was added to the volume of money of these countries it would proportionately raise prices in those countries, and especially the prices of those things we export and sell to them for gold.

In that event the farmer, the manufacturer and those who produce articles for export would get possibly 25 or 30 per cent more gold for their commodities than they receive now. And inasmuch as Mr. Carlisle himself admits that the prices of our export products in foreign countries tend to steady the prices here we can at once see that if the price of these commodities was raised 25 or 30 per cent or 50 per cent in foreign countries to which we export them they would necessarily go up to that figure at home.

As long as our policy is to drain these countries of their gold we must look for low prices in this country and in the countries to which we export our products, and the more gold we drain from England, Germany and France the more we lower their prices, and the consequence is the lower will be the prices of our export commodities to these countries, and if the prices fixed in these countries fix our prices here we readily understand [illegible] it is that prices are [illegible] cline, for this fact I [illegible] ssee, and the statisticians above referred to establish the truth of this beyond controversy, and I take issue with Mr. Carlisle on that point when he insists that prices, as a consequence of silver demonetization, have not fallen.

Will he or any gold advocate contend that had there been no demonetization of silver, and we had continued the free coinage of silver, prices would have fallen as they have? Or will he contend that the demonetization of silver has not had the effect to cause a fall in prices, which means an appreciation of money? If he does, will he explain, if he can, how the restoration of silver will have any effect upon prices or the value of money?—R. P. Bland at Sedalia, Mo.

What Is the Matter?

For three days the "sound money" committee of the Chamber of Commerce has neglected to inform us that the "silver craze" is dying out, and has also refrained from supplying interviews with people who thought the Chamber of Commerce ought to keep up the fight.

If the Chamber of Commerce has let go to get a better hold, it may be a more serious matter with a number of newspapers in the west and south than it will be with the United States treasury when the bond syndicate permits gold to go out.

The treasury has the United States behind it, but these newspapers have no support from the people of their localities and depend entirely for existence upon the New York chamber of commerce, the Gold trust and the administration.

The administration, of course, controls the policy of these newspapers, but there is no salary attached to a postoffice or a collectorship, either of customs or internal revenue, which will enable a man to live respectably and at the same time foot the weekly deficiency of running a newspaper which fails to represent the views of the majority of the people in the community where the paper is published.—New York Mercury.

Hoke Can't Fool 'Em.

The last of the crowds that came to hear the discussion of the currency question have departed. Hundreds who came expecting to see some new light cast upon the question by the secretary of the interior were disappointed by hearing the stock arguments of the goldbugs presented. As an able lawyer representing a bad cause Mr. Smith prepared his case in the best possible manner and presented it to the people with all the skill that he could command, but he didn't fool anybody.

The excursion would have convinced any unprejudiced person that south Georgia is practically solid for free coinage. Notwithstanding the fact that the railroads advertised the occasion extensively as a Hoke Smith day, with the secretary's picture on every handbill, the majority of those who came were in favor of free coinage and left stronger in the faith than ever.—Cordele (Ga.) Special.
